

Beneath the Rubble

Deuteronomy 33:27
January 19, 2010 by Shelby Spear

Where's my Hope - beneath the rubble?
Where do I find Strength in this complete destruction?

How can Courage exist when death surrounds me?

How can I see God, in the faces of despair?

"The eternal God is your refuge,
and underneath are the everlasting arms"

In the fallen buildings,
I am in the dust
In the eyes of orphans,
I am the innocent reflection

In the fresh laid tombs,
I am still eternal Life

In the souls of the lost,
I am the Grace to press on

"The eternal God is your refuge,
and underneath are the everlasting arms"

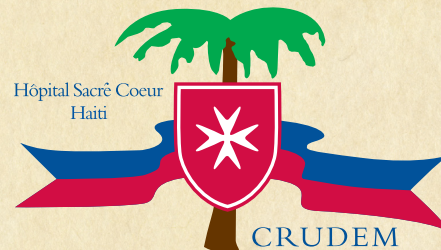

I am the hands that dig and rescue
I am the head that's bowed in prayer
I am the cries of those who suffer
I am the doctor giving desperate care

Look into the darkness,
I am still redeeming Light
In the harrowing brokenness,
I am still the Great Physician
For my lost and lonely children,
I am still the air they breathe

I remain your everlasting arms of Love
beneath the rubble

"Hello friends of the CRUDEM Foundation.
Greetings from Milot, Haiti!

We arrived at Hôpital Sacré Coeur today.
It is like coming home, but different this time. The hospital and the town have been transformed.

The people here are exhausted; happy to see reinforcements. Most work 16-20 hour days, missing their meals, showers, beds. What they did here was extraordinary. I cannot describe how valiantly this organization has responded to this crisis.

The number of people who dropped all job and family responsibilities and rushed to Haiti restores my faith in mankind's capacity to love. This was a war - chaotic, bloody, full of human misery, stoicism, inconsolable loss and heroic virtue.

We need your help. There is an incredible story here that needs to be told. We need your prayers but most importantly we need your financial support. This type of expansion of our responsibilities comes at a great price - human and monetary. Please support this mission."
